Introduction

Austrian-Hungarian military records from the Kriegsarchiv in Vienna are an under-utilized resource in Central European family history research. This situation exists in spite of the fact that the records are readily available on over 10,000 rolls of microfilm at the FHL¹, where they can be found catalogued under Austria / Military Records. Except for deaths recorded at military hospitals, these records mainly consist of Grundbuchblätter and Standestablen (muster lists and monthly reports). These records cover almost all geographical areas and military activities of the Empire pre-1700 to 1867.

For the novice, the size of this massive record base is daunting and it is often not immediately clear where to start to find a given individual. Since there is no general index (except for the states of present day Austria and for officers) it is necessary to know the unit in which an individual served in order to identify the desired records. In a few cases, indexes can be found for individual units.

Most of these records listed in the FHL catalogue are organized by units and then by type of record. The most generally useful as a place to start researching is with the Abgang protokolle (discharge records) and Grundbuchblätter. The Grundbuchblätter are organized by unit and often contain all or part of an individual's service records. Further available records of interest, but more difficult to search, are the muster listen (muster rolls) and standestablen.

Hungarian regiments consisted of three field battalions of six companies each and a depot battalion of four companies. Each regiment also had two grenadier companies which were often detached and combined with grenadier companies from other battalions to form a separate grenadier battalion.

Austrian military line regiments were assigned recruiting areas. One battalion of a regiment, the Depot Battalion, was generally stationed in the recruiting area and the other battalions were in the field or on garrison duty elsewhere.

Recruits were drafted into the local depot unit, trained and dispatched to garrisons or battalions in the field. Fortunately for family history researchers, recruiting districts were changed only infrequently, especially in the last half of the 19th century. To find Banaters in military records it is thus necessary to identify the area in which they lived and which unit recruited in the areas in which an individual lived. A 1898 recruitment map of the Hapsburg Empire is available on the internet at www.KuK-wehrmacht.de/regiment. Another source is Wrede in five volumes². Unfortunately, the set is not readily available and the reprint edition is expensive. Wrede has the additional advantage that it also gives an abbreviated sketch of the campaigns, engagements and garrison stations for any given unit in an easy to follow, uniform format. Finally, the tables in Blodgett (FEEFHS Journal) are the best available summary of recruiting districts. From these sources, it is apparent that the 61st and 29th Infantry Regiments (IR) were the major units recruiting in the Banat; the 61st recruiting largely in Temes and Torontal counties respectively. Abstracts of Banaters in the Grundbuchblätter of these regiments are given in Part IV of this volume.

The assignment of recruiting districts has far-reaching consequences for family history reserchers. With the assignment of recruiting districts, initially in 1770-1787, the first reliable census of the Empire was undertaken. To account for those potentially subject to conscription, houses were numbered for the first time. The central authorities were then able to identify every subject of the Empire by name, personal data and place of residence. The recording of house numbers in the church books allowed recruiting detachments, after inspection of the church books, to determine the eligibility and place of residence of those subject to induction.

Generally, when looking for an individual in military records it is most practical to start with the Abgang records. These are relatively easy to read, uniform in format, and because they include birth year and place, religion as well as frequently all or part of the service record, it is usually possible to match the person with individuals from other sources, most often church books in the form of family books

The 1898 recruitment map also indicates that the 33rd IR based in Arad recruited north of the Morosch. The 33rd Inf. Reg't began recruiting in 1857 in the area of Arad. In 1848 the 3rd battalion of the 33rd IR stationed in Hungary went over to the Rebels, likely a reflection of its higher Magyar content. The 21st Artillery, 4th and 16th Hussars recruited in the Temeswar district 1830-1867. The 3rd Hussars in 1878 recruited in the district of the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The 6th IR recruited in the Batschka starting in 1853. The first recruitment transport saw a contingent of 1000 men from the Batschka sent to the 6th IR regiment in Krakau. In 1860 recruiting in the Batschka was shared between the 6th IR and the 23rd IR. The 6th IR, based on Neusatz, recruited in the southern Batschka while the 23rd, based on Zombor, recruited in the northern Batschka.

When the Banat Military Frontier was disbanded in 1873, its manpower was distributed among the 29th, 43rd and 61st Inf. Regiments. When the number of infantry regiments was increased from 62 to 80 in 1860, this was, in part, achieved by transferring the 3rd battalions of the 29th, 33rd and 61st to the newly created 83rd Infantry Regiment.

PART II

DEATHS OF BANATERS IN REGIMENTAL, GARRISON AND FIELD HOSPITAL CHURCH BOOKS

Among the military records available from the FHL on microfilm are extensive garrison and field hospital records. The garrison and regimental death church books are available from Salt Lake up to ca. 1880. Due to the 100 year privacy laws prevailing in Austria, these are not available after 1905, and since the death records 1880-1905 in Salt Lake are on restricted microfilm rolls containing post 1905 records, it was necessary to view these records at the Kriegsarchiv in Vienna. The deaths in the Temeswar garrison hospital records (FHL Film #1454018-1454020) indicate and confirm that most deaths were among men from the 29th, 61st, IR, 9th Gendarmerie Regiment and 21st Sanitäts Abteilung, as would be expected from examining the 1898 recruitment map.

In addition to the data abstracted, the original records also give religion, the cause of death and the place buried. In this work, only deaths of Catholics or Protestants were abstracted. Greek Orthodox or children of military personal were not included in the abstraction. The latter, even though born in Temeswar or Arad, were often children of professional military personal and thus had little connection with the Donauschwab community. Unless indicated otherwise in the comments column, it can be assumed that the individual is a private soldier and Catholic. The entries are sorted first by place of birth and then by surname (See Table I).

On occasion, more recruits were inducted than could be maintained for their full enrollment period, usually because of budget restraints. In many cases after an initial training period of 18 months, the recruit was given an extended unpaid furlough. Those on such furlough are identified as Urlaubers in the records and these are noted in the comments section.

Not unexpectedly, the highest death rates in these Temeswar records occurred during the Revolutions of 1848-1849, particularly during the siege of Temeswar in the spring and summer of 1849. During the siege, typhus and scurvy were the most common causes of death. Within a week or two after the battle of Temeswar, 9 Aug 1849, and the lifting of the siege, scurvy was no longer being reported as a cause of death. Typhus and more frequently cholera continued to be major causes of death for the following months. There were a surprising number of deaths in 1849 caused by burns when, the Temeswar Garrison hospital burned as a result of the bombardment.

The bulk of deaths in these records were men of the 3rd battalion of the 61st IR which was garrisoned in Temeswar and involved in the defense of the fortress (1848-1849). A detachment of the 3rd Battalion was stationed in Arad during the siege of Arad, and some members of this detachment can be found in the Arad death records.

Upon return to peace in 1850, the 26th Inf. Reg't was moved in to garrison Temeswar. During the years 1849-1850, it lost over 2000 men, again largely due to typhus and cholera. The 26th IR consisted almost entirely of Italian recruits from the Austrian Lombard-Venetia provinces of Northern Italy. Overall, the number of deaths reported in these records which could be ascribed to direct military action was relatively small.

Inspection of the death dates in these records reveals that those villages located close to Temeswar suffered disproportionately during the Revolutions of 1848-1849. These were the villages of Bakowa, Billed, Friedorf, Jahrmarkt, Liebling, Neubeschenowa, Rekasch, Sackelhausen and St. Andreas and are due to the heavy recruitment from places near Temeswar in the days immediately before the siege in order to augment the garrison manpower. Twenty two of the deaths in 1849 were for teamsters, suggesting that these supply train personnel had been trapped in the citadel when the blockade closed down.

It might be noted that the records of “13 Hungarian generals” who were court marshaled and executed at Arad on the 6 October 1849, after capitulation of the insurgents, are found in both the Temeswar and Arad KBs as a Nachtraglist (Supplemental List) in 1850. Some aspects of this Nachtraglist are explored in later sections of this work.

In a similar manner, Banater deaths were abstracted from the Arad Garrison church books (Table II). Records of Hungarian regiments created after the Ausgleich in 1867, for example Grundbuch records, were transferred to Budapest in 1919. However, the regimental church books remained in Vienna and again are available on microfilm through the FHL. Again the Regimental KB records after ca 1880 are on restricted microfilm so that data in the period 1880-1905 had to be abstracted from records available in the Kriegsarchiv.

A striking feature of these garrison and regimental death records is the high number of suicides recorded in the last two decades of the 19th century, amounting to about 20% of the total recorded deaths in the KBs. Abstracts of the 61st regimental marriage records are also included in a separate database.

Finding death records of Banaters in various field hospitals is more problematic since it is not practical to search all available hospital records. It is a matter of trying to estimate where casualties during hostilities would have been cleared to after actions and focusing on field hospitals in these localities. On occasion, a clue to these localities can be found in the Standestabellen of the months after a major action. The abstracts of some Banaters who have been uncovered in a search of selected garrison and field hospital records are given in the associated databases.

Lists of some Banater POWs who died in Prussian captivity following the Seven Weeks War and in French captivity following the Italian Campaign of 1859 are available and these have been combed for Banaters and abstracts are given in the associated databases.

Finally, there were some records of Banaters who were transferred in 1797 from the 19th IR to 2nd Composite Deutsch Banater Grenz Battalion. These have been abstracted and presented in the associated database. In a few cases, these men have been matched with those in the appropriate family books and the results are so indicated.

PART III

THE REVOLUTIONS OF 1848/49 IN THE BANAT

Introduction

The revolutions of 1848-1849 began in the streets of Paris and were a liberal rebellion against the established order of feudalism, absolutism, privilege, nobility and the ruling houses. Within months the rebellion had spread and barricades were raised across Europe; in the streets of Frankfurt, Berlin, Prague, Vienna, Milan and Budapest. Kings abdicated, governments fell, parliaments met, constitutions were debated and republics were proclaimed. The established order, taken by surprise, gave way everywhere before the demands of the reformers. As the revolution spread eastward, it assumed a more nationalistic character. In the complex mix of ethnic minorities of the Austrian Empire, Czechs, Slovaks, Hungarians, Serbs and Croats saw the revolution as an opportunity to carve out autonomous national enclaves for themselves. The liberal issues of the revolution were forgotten and the conflict evolved into a nationalistic struggle with the Austrians and Slavs against the Magyars. The situation was further complicated by the antagonism between the various minorities. The Slav national goals were opposed by both the Magyars and Germans. The Serbs, Romanians and Siebenbürgers opposed Hungarian interests because they feared aggressive, coercive Magyarization should Hungary become the dominate power in SE Europe. In Siebenbürgen, the Romanian peasantry joined the Austrian cause. The Saxons were alienated by the uncompromising nationalism of the Magyars. There followed a series of seesaw campaigns across the Great Hungarian Plain as opposing forces took the field. A weakened Austria, fully engaged in Northern Italy, was initially not able to dominate the Hungarians. However, the success of Austrian arms in Prague and Northern Italy, as well as disorganization in the rebel ranks, eventually made the forces of reaction felt in the Pannonia Basin.

The Banaters were not a politically minded minority and they lacked political leadership. Unlike the Serbs, the Banaters had little vision of an independent Banat. For the most part, they avoided major participation in the conflict. The Banaters, as well as other peasant populations, wanted relief from serfdom and forced labor to the nobility. It was not simple for Banaters to achieve a unified position. They could not forget that it was Maria Theresia and her son who had sold Banat villages to private landlords, resulting in the loss of their privileges. The Hungarians promised the abolishment of serfdom and a bulwark against Serb encroachment. And like the Serbs and Saxons, the Banaters feared coercive Magyarization on the part of the Hungarians, a process which would come to pass a few decades later. Hungarians had been forbidden by Austria to settle in the Banat Military Frontier for fear that they would someday combine with the Turks against Austria in possible future conflicts. In 1848/49, Johann Hübsch held together the Grenzers of the XII Deutsch Banater Grenz Regiment of the Militärgrenz and protected the land and people of the Grenzland against encroachment by Romanian and Hungarian combatants. Banaters were subject to requisitions and looting on the part of various campaigning opponents as they crisscrossed the Banat. Numerous skirmishes occurred between Hungarians and Serbs along the lower Temesch and Bega. The Serbs burned Ernsthausen and part of Sartscha. The Hungarians burned and completely destroyed Perlas. For three and a half months in the spring and summer of 1849 the Hungarians besieged Austrian forces in the Fortress of Temeswar. The siege was lifted when a relieving Austrian army under von Haynau and converging Russian forces under Paskievich overwhelmed the Hungarians on the 9th of August 1849 under the ramparts of Temeswar.

Almost everywhere in Germany and Austria the liberal forces of the revolution quarreled among themselves. The rebels lost their unity. As the established governments recovered from their surprise and shock, the counter revolutionaries gained the upper hand and defeated the rebels. In the Banat, the final surrender of the Hungarians occurred 11 August 1849 to Russian forces outside of Hellburg.

In the end, five million Slavs, 2.5 million Romanians and 1.5 million Donauschwabs were not ready to elevate 5 million assertive, nationalistic Magyars to a dominating position. The sole permanent outcome of the revolution was the emancipation of the peasants.

SOME ASPECTS OF THE BATTLE OF TEMESWAR

In the opening phases of the Revolutions of 1848-1849, the old campaigner, Feldmarschall Leutnant Josef Count Radetzky, led regiments of the Empire in storming the rebel barricades in the streets of Milan in April of 1848. A Grenadier Battalion of the 61st Infantry Regiment, which contained many Banaters in its rank³, took part in these actions. These Austrian units lost a third of their strength through casualties and desertion in fighting to extinguish the liberal cause during the street fighting in "the five days of Milan". When hostilities commenced, the 1st and 2nd battalions of the 61st IR were garrisoning the fortress of Piacenza.

In order to concentrate his dispersed forces, Radetzky withdrew his scattered garrisons from Lombardy, across the Mincio, into the Quadrilateral where he regrouped his formations under the ramparts of Verona. Karl Albert of Sardinia mobilized the Piedmontese army and crossed the frontier in pursuit. Based on the Quadrilateral fortresses of Verona, Mantua, Peschiera and Legnago, Radetzky fought a brilliant offensive-defensive campaign on interior lines. Although outnumbered, Radetzky's regulars overwhelmed the Lombard-Piedmont insurgents at Custozza, driving them out of Venetia and Lombardy back across the Ticino. At Narova, Karl Albert's forces were decisively crushed by Radetzky's veterans. With this reversal of fortune, the Piedmontese were forced to sue for peace. The Italian train to nationhood was derailed and the reformers hopes extinguished.

With the flag of the Double Headed Eagle flying over the Lombard fortress and the security of the Habsburg cause in Northern Italy thus insured, it was possible to concentrate Habsburg bayonets on the Great Hungarian Plain. There, after some seesawing campaigning in Northern and Central Hungary as well as Siebenbürgen, the white coats maneuvered the rebel Magyar forces into Southwestern Hungary. The final campaign of the Hungarian revolution of 1848-1849 was played out on the plains of the Banat in the summer of 1849.

BATTLE OF THE THEISS CROSSING

By the summer of 1849, the forces of reaction under the banner of the Double Headed Eagle put paid to the aspirations of Kossuth and the Maygar reformers before the ramparts of Temeswar. In the last stages of the rebellion the rebel forces had retreated into the Banat. The pursuing Imperialists advanced from Pest in three columns towards Szegedin, the door to the Banat.

In order to deny the counter-revolutionary forces the Szegedin crossings of the Theiss, the insurgents had begun the construction of an entrenched camp on the left bank early in July. This extensive entrenched line of field works included the city of Szegedin in a wide arc starting at Pussta Matyi on the shore and extending in a northerly direction along a dead arm of the Theiss (Matyere) to Dorosma. From there, the earth works extended in an easterly direction along some sand hills to Csongrad. Part of these field works were four sided redoubts and part were lunettes spaced about 400 yards from each other. The village of Dorosma was put in a defensive state and strengthened with redoubts and fleches. Some of these earth works were connected by trenches.

The insurgents had the advantage of interior lines and thus should have been able to more easily achieve concentration against converging Imperial forces as they forced a crossing of the Theiss.

Nevertheless, as with the defense of any river line, the insurgents had to keep their forces distributed along the whole defensive line to avoid being outflanked. Moreover, the insurgents needed another 10-14 days to complete and arm their field fortifications along the Theiss. A quick crossing of the Theiss would establish the Imperials on the left bank before the rebels could complete their field works and concentrate their formations. Arad had fallen to the revolutionaries and Temeswar must be hard pressed so that it must fall in a few weeks. With the fall of Temeswar, the insurgents would have a strong position to continue their stubborn resistance towards the house of Habsburg.

The Imperials strengthened their hand for the assault crossing of the Theiss by bringing up by forced marches, 12,000 additional men who were previously engaged in covering the siege of Komorn. With the arrival of these reinforcements, the Austrians were able to concentrate 230 guns for an opposed crossing against the entrenched camp.

The northern column of the south army made an unopposed crossing of the Theiss north of Szegedin and the junction with the Marosch. This corps, swiftly and unhindered, constructed a bridge across the Theiss and pressed on to Mako, which the vanguard reached on August 4th. Three squadrons and a cavalry battery of the advance guard overpowered the rebel rear guard before Mako, taking many prisoners (see map).

Under cover of a heavy bombardment, the main body forced a crossing of the Theiss in the face of determined rebel opposition just south of the confluence of the Marosch near Szegedin. It is said that the "yellow-muddy waters of the Theiss, scarcely ever fit for drink, were dyed red with the blood of the slain"⁴. The insurgents retreated from the Theiss in the direction of Temeswar with the Imperials following up closely.

to Segenthau (Dreisnitz), where it was in a position to cut the main Temeswar-Arad highroad. Part of the northern column advanced through Peszak, Warjasch, Knesz and Hodon to fall on the rebel right flank at St. Andreas. The main center column, after crossing the Theiss, pressed on over Marienfeld and along the axis Grosskomlosch, Grabatz, Ostern, Lenauheim, Grossjetscha to Kleinbetschkerek. The right flank detachment marched via Hatzfeld and Gertianosch to Sackelhausen, following up rebel detachments falling back from the southern Banat.

The advancing Imperials were able to concentrate 37 battalions, 44 squadrons and 192 guns in their positions between K1 Betschkerek and Hodon for what was to prove to be largely an artillery battle.

On the 7th August the Imperials had reports that the insurgents were raising the siege of Temeswar and had begun the transport of siege artillery and munitions to Arad. As early as the 5th of August, two battalions, 2 squadrons and a single gun had been sent away to Arad. On the 8th, a detachment of 6 K. u K. squadrons with a cavalry battery were sent on via Perjamosch and Warjasch to Mailat. The next day this cavalry force raided towards Winga, where they hunted down the retreating insurgent siege trains on the Temeswar-Arad highroad. Near Orzydorf, the raiders sliced into a rebel siege train retiring from Temeswar, taking two 24 pounders, two 18 pounders, 260 baggage wagons, as well as numerous prisoners and horses.

A brigade of the Imperial main body reached Grabatz at midday on the 8th, and their scouts encountered a rearguard of Hussars which they attacked. This rebel rearguard was strengthened to 14 squadrons and two batteries. A further Imperial brigade was advanced forward from Grabatz and after a short skirmish, the Magyar rear guard recoiled back onto Grossjetscha. As the counter-revolutionaries followed up on Grossjetscha, the rebels abandoned the place. The white coats laagered that night at Grossjetscha.

After failing to hold the Theiss crossing, the rebels then intended to concentrate their forces around Arad. This included units coming from the direction of Grosswardein, Debreczen and Siebenbürgen. Various detachments from the lower Donau, Orsova, Werschetz, Weisskirchen and Pantschowa were pulled back to Temeswar. With proper coordination, the insurgents had the potential of concentrating 95,000 men and 294 guns. On the 7th August, a 9,000 man corps was sent off from Temeswar to Arad by way of Orzydorf. The siege guns and six mortars were held back to continue the bombardment of Temeswar. In the event, the insurgents were able to bring ca. 60,000 men, 7,000 cavalry and 164 guns onto the battlefield.

The rapid advance of the Imperials forced the battle of Temeswar before the rebels could effect all their concentrations. Further rapid advance of a brigade along the right bank of the Marosch in the direction of Arad threw the insurgents further into confusion and further away from their intended course. On the 6th August, an endless wagon train of the provisional revolutionary government fell back from Arad in the direction of Lugosch, crossing the Marosch on a pontoon bridge.

THE BATTLE OF TEMESWAR

The final battle of the rebellion, the battle of Temeswar, commenced on the morning of 9 August 1849. The coming battle was fought largely among the corn fields and vineyards in the neighborhood of Kleinbetschkerek and Neubeschenowa. Battlefield visibility was severely restricted by these crops. Several swampy streams which cut through the battlefield limited the use of cavalry. The Imperial cavalry was extended from Lenauheim to Kleinbetschkerek while the reserve corps advanced from Peszak to Hodon, attacking the rebel right flank. Initially the battle was largely an artillery battle which took place at fairly long distances. The artillery of the rebels drove the Imperials back almost to their starting point at Kleinbetschkerek, but their ammunition resupply failed.

It was Austrian cavalry reserves of Hussars which saved the day. Units of the 4th corps which had marched from Peszak via Knees to Hodon, fell on the insurgent right flank at St. Andreas. Supported by two 12 pound batteries, the Imperial cavalry debouched into the insurgent right flank where they rolled up battery after battery. Insurgent baggage trains which had been sheltering behind the right flank awaiting a favorable moment to take the highroad to Arad were caught in the collapse, and added to the rebel confusion as they turned back on Temeswar. A rebel Hussar regiment with 3 batteries was overwhelmed as it tried to stand and stem the retreat which became general all along the line. Imperial batteries were advanced and pressed the rebels with grape. As the Imperial cavalry surged forward, they took many prisoners on a battlefield covered with dead, wounded and discarded equipment.

The left wing of the rebel army fell back from Sackelhausen, making for the village of Mehala in order to reach the way to Rekasch. A confused mass of cannon, baggage, munition wagons, all fleeing at a gallop, pressed on the road to Rekasch and Lugosch. The Imperial artillery reserves were brought up to play on the retreating columns. Imperial cavalry hunted down retreating insurgents among the vineyards, hedges and house rows up to the ramparts of the fortress. The routed rebel units dissolved, dispersing in flight, panic and confusion. In their route, the Magyar rebels failed to rally when they came up with the besieging forces at Temeswar. In turn, the besiegers abandoned their colors and were swept away by the mob towards Rekasch and Lugosch in the debacle. Insurgent losses in the disaster were put at 18,000, with a similar number of the defeated melting away and returning to their homes⁵.

The battle of Temeswar was the last deciding battle of the campaign. The Imperial main body had stood to at 4:00 that morning, marched 4-5 miles, fought 9-11 hours, without eating or water, under a blistering sun.

The immediate result of the battle was the relief of the Fortress of Temeswar. Relieving cavalry appeared before the bastions the evening of the battle. When the gates to the citadel were opened, the siege had lasted 107 days⁶. Fortress commander Rukavina received a promotion and the Order of the Iron Cross First Class for his stubborn defense of the citadel.

Of the garrison of 6,000, almost half, 2,700 had died of disease. Typhus had done its usual deadly work on another Balkan army. Only 300 defenders had been killed in the bombardment. Two thousand of the defending garrison were found sick at the moment of liberation⁷. The garrison was down to gnawing of the last bones of their horses and was beginning to consider their shoes and the rats for their next meal.

The 3rd battalion of the 61st Infantry Regiment was among the garrison units defending the fortress of Temeswar. Many Banaters can be found among the death records of the defenders (See Part I).

When the last revolutionary formations, consisting of 1,426 officers, 21,569 other ranks, with 144 field guns and 60 battle flags, laid down their arms in a formal surrender four days later near Hellburg (13 August 1849) to assisting Russian forces, retribution quickly followed. The counter-revolutionary forces had prevailed. The Habsburgs were again masters of Hungary. Kossuth and other leaders were able to escape by slipping across the border into Turkey (Kossuth ended up taking part in the American Civil War). Before escaping, Kossuth buried the Hungarian crown of St. Stefan under a mulberry tree near Orschowa, where it was recovered in 1853.

The court-martial and execution of 13 rebel leaders at Arad who fell into Austrian hands comprises one of the seminal events on the Hungarian 19th century road to nationhood⁸. Those rebel leaders which fate delivered to the victors were promptly court-martialed and a number of these generals were executed in the moat under the ramparts of the Fortress of Arad where a monument still stands which marks the event.

Baedeker⁹ notes that in Arad, "On a meadow outside the fortress rises a monument to the Hungarian generals shot here". On the other hand, according to Czappan¹⁰, "Der Grundherr von Ernesthaza, Feldmarschallentnant Kiss wurde zum Tode verurteilt und mit zwölf weiteren ungarische Generaelen am 6 Oktober 1849 in Arad hingerichtet". Thus, the two sources differ in the method of execution employed.

Included in the death records (1816-1875) of the Garrison Hospital of Arad¹¹ is a Nachtraglist (Supplemental list) inserted in the year 1850, which lists those executed. Those executed are classified as political prisoners from the "Hungarian Insurgent Army", all executed on the "Richtplatz zu Arad". Indeed, according to Czappan¹², there were 13 insurgent leaders executed on 6 October 1849, although there were fifteen executed altogether. Two of these executions were at a later date. Five of the executions were by firing squad and ten by hanging. The executions were carried out amidst a packed concourse of observing officers and men.

The execution of Leiningen-Westerburg, who was a member of the Hessian ruling house and related to the Coburgs, and thus to the English royal house, caused much resentment in England and for a few years, led to a rocky relationship between the Austrian and English governments.

All those executed had earlier held commissions as Imperial officers. Some authorities^(4, 8) maintain that the distinction between the different methods of dispatch was that those who died by firing squad were given the honor because they had surrendered to Austrian forces, while the indignity of swinging "by the rope" was reserved for those who had surrendered to Russian forces.

The last embers of the Hungarian rebellion were stamped out on the plains of the Banat with this crushing defeat of the Magyar rebels at Temeswar. The executions of the rebel leaders caused bitter resentment in the lands of St. Stefan.

With the reassertion of the Emperor's authority, those who had taken up arms against the empire were screened. Staff officers and above were court-martialed, executed, or more often condemned to years of fortress imprisonment in chains. About 10% (ca. 1,000) of the Habsburg officer corps had gone over to the insurgents. Junior officers, NCOs and some 45,000 men who had served with the rebels were forcedly conscripted as privates into Imperial line regiments. Subsequently, many of these impressed conscripts had to be released since the military authorities were unable to cope with the massive increase in manpower due to the usual chronic shortages of fiscal resources⁽⁴⁾ in the lands of the Double Headed Eagle.

MAP OF THE ADVANCE OF THE MAIN AUSTRIAN ARMY 1849

SOME ASPECTS OF THE SIEGE OF ARAD IN 1848-1849

In May of 1848, as revolutionary movements gained momentum across Europe, armed conflict broke out between Magyars and Serbs (Rascians) in the marches of the southern Banat. Each ethnic group feared the dominance of the other in the event of a breakup of the Empire. The Siebenbürgers, Serbs, Croats and Romanians feared the oppressive Magyarization should Hungary prevail in the coming conflict. Even though the Magyars were a minority in the lands of St. Stefan, the Magyar nobles held the levers of power and were mostly interested in preserving their privileges.

Two major fortresses, Arad and Temeswar, formed the basis of K. u. K. authority in southwestern Hungary. The great Vaubanesque citadel of Arad sits on the left bank and within a U-shaped bend of the river Marosch so that it is surrounded on three sides by the river. The city of Alt Arad, located on the right bank, faces the fortress from across the river. The city lies at some distance from the citadel so that the garrison was offered a clear field of fire over the glacis. On the open land side of the enceinte was situated the large village of Neu Arad.

In the fall of 1848, the Magyar revolutionary movement gained momentum and edged towards an open split with the Empire. In 1848, the Arad Festungskommandanten was 80 year old Feldmarschallleutnant Berger von der Pleisse (Johann Nepomuk Freiherr Berger von der Pleisse (1768-1864) who was to spearhead the forthcoming successful resistance to a nine month long siege of the citadel. Initially, Imperial forces were instructed not to become involved in Serb-Magyar disputes until the receipt of further instructions from the Hofburg. As early as October 1848 the rebels attempted to introduce Magyar National guard troops into the citadel of Arad to help garrison the place. By this transparent device they hoped to be able to deliver the place from within should open warfare arise. This attempt was naturally rejected by Festung Kommandanten Berger.

Berger had an 820 man garrison, of which only 450 were battle capable. In the summer months of 1848, as conditions between the principals deteriorated, Berger requisitioned provisions from the surrounding countryside in order to place the citadel in a position to withstand a lengthy siege. In addition, infantry, cavalry and munitions were transferred from Temeswar to strengthen the Arad garrison. On 3rd of October, the arrival of the Schwarzenburg Uhlan regiment at Arad allowed Berger to maintain communications with Temeswar and to cover requisition parties in the turbulent countryside.

The Schwarzenbergers did yeoman's work all during the revolutionary period in the Banat. They played a major roll in maintaining communications between Imperial units, particularly Arad and Temeswar, until in the late spring of 1849 when they were blockaded in Temeswar by superior rebel forces, where they then assumed a roll in defense of the capital.

In the fall months of 1848, the insurgents had begun a loose blockade of the Arad citadel which slowly tightened as the months passed and relations between the crown and rebels continued to harden. In October of 1848, Kossuth was declared a traitor, the Hungarian parliament suspended, and Hungary, Croatia, Slavonia, Siebenbürgen and the Banat were placed under martial law.

On October 3rd, Oberst Blomberg of the Temeswar General Kommando issued instructions that the Magyar National Guard and Landwehr units in Arad city were to be disarmed. The Arad Festungs Kommando also demanded an answer from the Arad city magistrates regarding their position in the rebellion. They were to declare if they would obey the Emperor's will, maintain order in the city with the National Guard in cooperation with the Imperial military authorities or whether they would go over to the rebels. When the city authorities refused to acquiesce, open hostilities followed.

Before the blockade closed down entirely, an Oberlieutenant Unukich led a 50 man detachment of the 3rd Battalion, 61st Infantry Regiment from Temeswar to reinforce the garrison of Arad. During the coming siege, Lt. Unurich was to lead over 35 sorties in defense of the citadel which resulted in the destruction of rebel batteries, capture of munitions and burning of buildings in the city which sheltered the besiegers. Oberlieutenant Georg Unurich was awarded the Order of Maria Theresia for his many successful sorties.

On the 8th of October, Kommandant Berger declared the fortress to be on war footing and placed it under martial law. On 12th October, the fortress was declared to be under a state of siege. By October 16th, the rebels had occupied Neu-Arad and the fortress was cut off from the outside world. The fortress had stocks of provisions calculated to last for two months. The first shots were fired on the 7th of October by the garrison against the city of Arad when home guard units within the city were not disarmed and to force back nearby rebel pickets. The insurgents slowly collected a force of 8,000 men. This led to many small engagements and skirmishes with the Schwarzenburg Uhlans. This cavalry force was supported by bombardment and sorties from the fortress. Events elsewhere in the Banat forced the withdrawal of the Uhlans, and by October 23rd, Arad was completely cut off from Temeswar and other Imperial controlled localities. On this date the garrison counted 1,381 effectives in addition to military family members, civil servants and prisoners for a total of 1,610 individuals. Provisions on hand at this time were calculated to last for 30 days, which could be extended to 60 days by consuming the horses.

In the fortress were imprisoned 33 prisoners of the Gross Kikinda movement, as well as a number of military personal condemned to fortress work. On the 10th of November Berger had all prisoners released.

In the night of 3-4 December, the insurgents stormed the fortress in an attempted coup de main and took an outwork. As the assaulting rebels came up to the main ramparts they were met with a devastating fire. The rebel column dissolved. The ditch was left filled with their dead and wounded. Subsequently, the besieging corps was increased to 20,000 men and the insurgents began to accumulate supplies and munitions for a formal siege. By the 10th of December, the garrison was eating their horses.

On the December 14th, a relief column under General Graf Leiningen of 300 wagons containing foodstuffs, munitions and powder was run into the fortress. The reinforcement column came partly from Hermannstadt/Siebenbürgen and partly from Temeswar. The two divisions joined up near Engelsbrunn and were escorted by a company of Szekler Grenzers, a battalion of Bianchi-Infanterie and covered by the Schwarzenbergers. Under heavy cannon fire and hard fighting, the column forced its way around the left flank of 15,000 enemy, taking the left bank of the Marosch and pushed the reinforcements into the fortress before retiring. With its purpose achieved, the fortress was reprovisioned with supplies for three months, munitions, including some 30 and 60 pound mortars, as well as reinforcing the garrison with two additional companies of Grenzers, bringing it to a level of 1,500 effectives.

Upon withdrawing on December 17th, Leininger's relief column evacuated those sick from the fortress. After the withdrawal, the Magyars were slow in reoccupying the left bank of the Marosch which gave the garrison time to completely destroy the siege works which had thus far been advanced. It was the 26th of December before the insurgents resumed the bombardment, and siege preparations now were carried out with greater urgency and energy. The rebels built 18 batteries containing 32 pieces, which alone in 3 days fired 10,000 rounds.

Until the 10th of January the insurgents made good progress which the weak garrison replied only with difficulty. On the night of 3-4 February, under cover of a heavy bombardment, the insurgents opened their first parallel. On the 7th of February, the approach of a weak Austrian-Serb field corps, containing the 3rd battalion of the 61st IR, threatened and again the insurgents were forced to raise the siege. The insurgent forces were divided on each bank of the Marosch. With the thin ice on the river, the insurgents could not quickly support either bank and they were subject to defeat in detail. As a result, the insurgents were forced again to abandon the left bank of the Marosch, remove their siege material and concentrate their forces on the right bank. This retreat allowed the Serbs to occupy Neu-Arad without resistance on the 7th of February. On the following morning the rebel forces by Arad were subjected to a general bombardment which was also supported by Berger's guns from the ramparts. The explosion of a rebel munitions wagon caused confusion in the rebel ranks, and at midday the Serbs, supported by a Imperial grape battery, managed to cross on the ice and penetrate into Alt-Arad. The senior rebel commanders panicked and their forces retired in disorder. The Serb units, once inside Alt-Arad, dispersed to plunder and loot. Fleeing townsmen reported to the rebels that the Serbs were dispersed and that the city was lightly held. The rebels rallied under junior officers, and retook the city, recovering most of their siege guns. This Serb force was pushed back across the river, but remained in the neighborhood of Neu-Arad until the 9th, when it retired to Temeswar. The rebels then repossessed Neu-Arad. On the 13th of February, with the aid of this Serb force, further convoys of supplies and artillery were run into the citadel. By the 23rd of February, the Austrian field corps returned to Temeswar and the insurgents again resumed their siege work without occupying Neu-Arad, so the citadel still had contact on the left bank with the countryside and could continue to requisition supplies as well as clear obstructions from the glacis. On the 1st of April, the rebels again occupied Neu-Arad, and for third time invested the citadel, cutting it off from the outside. The insurgents reestablished their batteries and reopened the first parallel for the second time.

Now begin the most difficult period of the siege for the garrison. For the rebels, the siege progressed so slowly it was a question whether the citadel would be gained by the application of arms or by starvation. The bombardment caused great damage, forcing the garrison and hospital into the casemates. Increasing sickness continued to sap the garrison's strength. Many guns on the ramparts were dismounted from enemy fire.

Ramming gives the garrison strength at this stage of the siege at 1,510 (which was raised to 1,756 when civilians and prisoners were included). This included 50 men from a detachment of the 61st IR and four companies of the XIII Romanian Banat Grenz Regiment. Available supplies and munitions in the fortress were calculated to last the garrison for two months.

The insurgents occupied the nearby villages in strength which further prevented the garrison from sending out requisition parties. During this period the consumption of provisions was the greater threat to continued resistance of the garrison. After the runoff of spring flooding on the Marosch, the insurgents redoubled their siege efforts.

During the siege, the garrison death rate, mostly due to sickness, ran 6-8 men/day, with 230-240 men down sick. The Franziskaner Kloster in the fortress, adjacent to the garrison hospital, was employed as an emergency hospital to accommodate the overflow of patients. On the 24th of January, the kloster was shot through and the sick had to be removed from the kloster keller to the overflowing hospital. On the 24th of February, the hospital was fired and almost all of the sick and wounded lost their lives in the fire. From October 1st to January 20th, 455 garrison members and 30 civilians died, about 30% of the garrison. About a fourth of the garrison at any one time was down sick.

The surrounding Romanian villages supported the imperial cause and could send reports into the fortress by the less guarded river side. In such a way, the garrison could learn in advance of a storm assault on the ramparts.

On the 1st of June, a rebel delegation demanded an unconditional delivery of the citadel. When these demands were rejected, the insurgents returned on the 3rd of June with conditions that in consideration for the bravery and firm resistance of the garrison, an honorable capitulation was offered. Arrangements were made for three garrison officers to travel to Temeswar and Pest in order to determine the military-political conditions in the country and consult with their forces. At this time, the entire Banat with the exception of Temeswar and Arad, were in the hands of the insurgents. These officers returned by June 12th to report. During their absence an armistice was maintained.

Since October 1st, 485 men, a third of the garrison had died. Only 900 men remained able to stand to their colors. The garrison was approaching the limits of its endurance. After due consideration of the condition of the citadel and supplies remaining in the fortress, Berger decided on an honorable capitulation and opened negotiations with the rebels. The negotiations for terms were opened on the 24th of June and lasted until the 27th.

On June 29, 1849 the garrison marched out with full honors of war. The garrison, civilians and their families were guaranteed their possessions with full amnesty. The officers pledged that they and their men would not take up arms against Hungary for six months. The garrison was given free transportation through Hungary to Steiermark.

The fortress with its remaining supplies was turned over to the insurgents on July 12th. The rebels took possession of over 66 guns of different caliber within the fortress. The fall of the citadel allowed the insurgents to transfer their 28 siege guns from Arad to Temeswar.

So ended the nine month siege of Arad. During the course of the siege, the rebels lost an estimated 3,000 men. The successful and extended defense of Arad prevented the insurgents from focusing their forces and resources on mounting a more aggressive attack on Temeswar. The forces of the counter-revolution would prevail, and in another 45 days the fortress would find itself back again in the hands of Habsburg authorities.

SOME ASPECTS OF THE SEIGE OF TEMESWAR IN 1849

As the revolutions of 1848-1849 played themselves out on the Great Hungarian Plain, the Magyar insurgents laid the fortresses of Temeswar and Arad under siege. The fortress commandant of Temeswar was 81 year old Georg Freiherr Rukavina von Vidovgrad who had began his military career some 60 years earlier as a common soldier standing guard duty in this same fortress (1).

In the spring of 1848, fighting had broken out between Serbs and Magyars in the southern Banat. Imperial commanders in the Banat had been instructed to avoid becoming involved in these local conflicts until the situation clarified. On the 24th of April of 1848, the Serbs raised their flag over the city hall in Gross Kikinda. The Serbs released 110 prisoners, stormed and plundered the Catholic Church, plundered and burned the city treasure house with its records. Forces under the command of General Ernst Kiss drove the Serbs from Gross Kikinda, but meanwhile 300-400 Serbs collected in Grossbetschkerek, where they burned record books written in Hungarian. There followed a series of battles and engagements between Serbs and Magyars; on August 3, 1849 at Neuzina, on the 28th of August at Etschka, on the 29th at Stefansfeld and on the 8th of October at Sigmundfeld. On the 5th of August, the Serbs had burned Ernsthausen and part of Sartscha. The Magyars under Kiss established a field hospital in Sigmundfeld (2, 3). In October of 1848, the Kaiser had placed Hungary, Croatia, Slavonia, Siebenbürgen and the Banat under martial law, declared Kossuth a traitor and suspended the Hungarian parliament.

As the year progressed, the positions of the Magyars and the Crown hardened. On the 10th of October, Rukavina proclaimed Temeswar and its suburbs to be under siege conditions (2, 3). Measures were undertaken at once to put the fortress in a condition to withstand a siege. Provisions and manpower were requisitioned from the surrounding villages. Additional recruits were enrolled.

The garrison manpower consisted of 6 ½ battalions of infantry (4), among which Remming (6) lists two battalions of the 61st Infantry Regiment. However Kiszling lists only one battalion, the 3rd, which must be correct, and a battalion of the Romanian Banat Grenzers. In addition, there were 6 squadrons of the Schwarzenberg 2nd Uhlans and miscellaneous artillery and engineering troops for a total of 8,840 men. Of these, 4,357 were regulars, the rest raw recruits. There were about 6,000 inhabitants of the city in the fortress, so that an estimated 15,000 men and 1,300 horses were present. The fortress was normally allotted 390 guns, of which only 213 were on hand.

The Imperial forces in Temeswar enlisted 1,500 volunteers from nearby villages on 6 month tours. Sixty seven recruits were raised from Jahrmarkt alone (4). Many of these recruits provided the manpower to form a 4th battalion of the 61st IR.

The fortress was not invested during the winter field campaign of 1848-1849 in southern Hungary. On the 25th of April, revolutionary formations advanced on Temeswar and that day marks the beginning of the 107 day siege endured by the garrison and inhabitants of Temeswar.

At the beginning of April increasing insurgent strength pushed Graf Leiningen's field forces back under the ramparts of the citadel and restricted their freedom of action. Increased measures necessary to put the fortress in a state to withstand a lengthy siege were undertaken. Provisions on hand to maintain a garrison of 4,000 men were increased to 6,000 for three months.

On the southern glacis between the citadel and the Bega canal was considerable unobstructed room and this was converted into an entrenched camp by throwing up low earthworks. This entrenched camp was covered by the guns on the ramparts. During this period, success of the revolutionaries had given them possession of most of southern Hungary and Siebenbürgen so that Temeswar was isolated and quick relief was only a far distant hope.

The insurgents at once brought the fortress under bombardment. The rebel line of attack to breach the ramparts followed that employed by Prinz Eugen in 1716, who had taken the fortress, at a high cost, from the Turks in 44 days.

On the 29th of April the insurgents took the suburb of Fabrik and established a camp in Freidorf. The water supply for Temeswar originated in the suburb of Fabrik and was in the hands of the insurgents. On the 14th of May the rebels cut off the supply of drinking water, leaving the garrison dependent on wells within the walls, with their various degrees of contamination. Further wells were dug within the walls.

Initially, the insurgents had to divide their resources between the siege works at Arad and Temeswar, so that they started the siege with only 35 guns. The rebels established a gun foundry in nearby St. Andreas. Initially, the insurgents showed a lack of both energy and talent in their projected task. As the siege progressed, they found engineer officers who were trained in the art of siegecraft and the work advanced at a faster pace.

The location of Temeswar gave the attackers some tactical advantages. The Jagd and Csokerwald on the north and west sides of the fortress provided cover for the besiegers, as well as wood for the construction of batteries. The suburbs of Temeswar provided shelter, subsistence and manpower for the siege work construction. The buildings of the suburbs provided cover up to the esplanade. This allowed storming parties to form up under cover.

On health grounds, the moat around the fortress had been allowed to dry out over the years and the mud which had been deposited had raised its level, leaving the ditch only as a minor barrier to assault parties.

Von Rukavina led an active defense which included numerous sorties. The first sortie by the garrison came on May 12th. At 3 in the morning, Graf Lemingen, the garrison commander, led a sortie of 1,700 men, 620 cavalry with 14 cannon into the suburb of Fabrik. After a hard fought engagement, the K. u. K. forces were driven back under the protection of their bastions. This sortie was ineffective since the Magyars apparently had advanced knowledge of the coming attack.

On the 14th of May, the insurgents begin construction of their first battery to the SW of the enceinte. As the batteries were finished, the garrison mounted a sortie of 5 companies of infantry, 3 guns and 100 workers, but were driven back by reinforced besiegers.

During May 18-24, the insurgents subjected the stronghold to an energetic bombardment with a view of taking the entrenched laager. The insurgents advanced their pickets under the protection of natural cover, as near as possible to the Festungswerk.

The garrison was divided into three watches. The first watch served the batteries on the ramparts, the second part manned the casemates in case of a storm assault and the third part was resting and sleeping.

On the 27th of May, an attempted sortie from the fortress found the enemy alert and subsequently withdrew. During a sortie on the 28th on the south side of the citadel, wooden buildings next to the esplanade were set on fire to deny the rebels cover. On the 9th of June, the insurgents unmasked 3 batteries of 15 guns, and on the 11th, batteries of 30 and 50 pound mortars were unmasked. These opened a murderous bombardment on the enceinte which continued unbroken for 8 days and nights.

On the night of June 15-16, the insurgents stormed the entrenched camp from the direction of Josefstadt, and burned the Bega Bridge, but were thrown back with heavy losses.

By the end of June, the Temeswar garrison counted 1,100 men down sick. On the 1st of July, the first parallel was opened by insurgent sappers at a distance of 450 klafters (about 900 meters) from the covered way. The siege works of the insurgents, the ditches, approaches, powder magazines, breastworks, etc., were well placed and built in a thoroughly professional manner. As Arad fell into the hands of the insurgents, the rebels pressed the siege at Temeswar. The besieging forces were transferred from Arad to Temeswar, raising the insurgent forces to 11,000 men, 1,500 Hussars and 55 guns. The number of batteries was raised to 20. New batteries were uncovered on the 4th of July with a heavy bombardment which lasted until the 19th, a full 15 days.

On the night of July 4-5, under cover of a bombardment from the citadel, two columns from the entrenched laager sortied along both banks of the Bega canal. The first column of about 400 men on the right bank drove in rebel pickets and took the rebel batteries at the point of the bayonet. They succeeded in spiking 5 pieces before retiring back to the covered way. The second column of about 500 men advanced along the left bank, taking the trenches and batteries of an alarmed enemy. Before retiring, they spiked 13 rebel cannon. On the night of July 11th, a further sortie by 600 men of the 61st, against mortar batteries, succeeded in spiking 7 mortars at a cost of 60 men dead and wounded (5).

Further siege guns were moved from Arad, so that on the 12th of July the insurgents added 13 heavy siege guns to play against the bastions, bringing the total to 68 pieces. Under the protection of the bombardment, the insurgents opened their second parallel on the 15th of July and armed it with new batteries.

On the night of July 18-19, the insurgents attempted a determined storm on the covered way and the entrenched laager which was repulsed with bloody losses to the attackers. The glacis was left covered with their dead and wounded.

The insurgents opened their third parallel on the 25th of July and armed it with 30 additional guns brought from Arad so they possessed 98 pieces altogether. As the saps advanced, the Magyars were able to displace their batteries forward, closer to the ramparts.

The bombardment reached its highest degree on July 30th. On the night of July 26th, the insurgents stormed the north and northeastern sides of the enceinte, but were turned back with grape shot.

On the 31st of May, 400, and on the 1st of July 800 inhabitants of Temeswar were expelled from the fortress, but were turned back by the insurgents. These citizens were then enrolled in the defense of the place and were employed in the repair and improvement of damaged traverses and passages. By July, a quarter of the garrison was down sick, mainly from scurvy and typhus, and the first signs of cholera appeared. The death rate from all causes approached 160/day.

All accounts of the siege stress the heat wave which engulfed the Banat that summer of 1849. The temperatures climbed to and stayed at 30° C. (86° F.) for months. These high temperatures and high humidity caused much suffering, both among the defenders as well as the troops in the field. The drinking water problems for the garrison and inhabitants were aggravated by the high temperatures.

Initially, fire fighters in the city were able to extinguishing fires before they got out of control. Attention had to be given to keeping the narrow streets free of debris and ruins of houses destroyed in the bombardment, which had fallen into the streets. Daily, the bombardment resulted in additional fires which were beyond the strength of the fire fighters to extinguish. The magazine lay in ashes. As the bombardment increased, it was so intense that even the house cellars no longer afforded protection. Citizens and sick took refuge from the bombardment in the casemates. The works, traverses and passages suffered heavy damage which could only be repaired at night or in pauses during the bombardment. Towards the end of July, the hard-pressed garrison began to husband its artillery resources against increasing insurgent pressure, and the expected final assault.

By the 25th of July, a large part of the garrison was in the hospital. Many of those still under arms were weak and only about of the quarter of the garrison was fit for service. The military hospital was vastly overcrowded, but in addition, in such a pestilent condition that many of the sick preferred to do without medical help.

On the night of July 30th, the Kloster of the Barmherzige Brüder burned. The Kloster was sited across the street from the garrison hospital, and was at that time being used as an emergency hospital. Many of the patients who could be removed suffered severe burns and patients were still dying from burns for many days after the fire (See Part II). The Kaserne by the Peterwardeiner Tor also burned on this same date. The Kaserne could not be saved because of the exhaustion of the firefighters after 12 hours fighting the Kloster fire.

With the approach of the relieving Austrian army, the insurgents made one final effort to take the citadel. On the evening of the 4th of August, the rebels attempted coup de main with a general storm on the crest of the glacis. The attack group formed up in the second parallel in two columns and at 9 o'clock stormed the entrenched laager from two sides, as well as the south side of the citadel at the Peterwardein gate. Two heavy attacks were thrown back by the depleted defenders. Finally, a third rebel attack was received at the point of the bayonet, and it too failed. The insurgents fell back across esplanade in wild flight, aided by canister. The glacis was left covered with rebel dead and dying. The next day, the 5th of August, a revolutionary delegation offered the decimated garrison terms "in consideration of their brave and noble defense" in return for yielding the citadel. The many signs of succor encouraged Rakovina to reject the terms.

On the next day, lookouts on the ramparts noticed that rebel crews had left some of their batteries unmanned and could hear the roar of cannonade in the distance. They could see that some rebel trains were moving off in the direction of Arad. This was the beginning of a general withdrawal and attempt to concentrate their forces in the region of Arad. The withdrawal continued on August 6-8, with the insurgents destroying their batteries and earthworks. At this opportune moment, the hard pressed garrison was too weak to mount an effective sortie since only 1,233 infantry and 388 cavalry could stand to their colors.

On August 9th, the garrison could hear the cannonade in the near distance, and the same evening Imperial cavalry arrived before the gates of the citadel. After hard marches through oppressive heat, and an exhausting 10 hour battle, the victorious Imperials pursuit of the enemy followed into the night. This aggressive pursuit of the rebels prevented the retreating, dispirited mob from rallying when they came up with the forces besieging Temeswar. The siege was lifted that evening, and the besiegers were in turn swept away in the panic of the defeated rebel field army.

The rapid advance of the Hapsburg army had forced the insurgents to accept a battle under the ramparts of Temeswar before they could get all their forces away to concentrations around Arad. On the afternoon of August 8th, a sortie of 150 Grenzers took two guns and 55 prisoners from the weakened besiegers. A further weak sortie was made on the 9th, which had little effect on the outcome of the battle. Towards evening one could see from the citadel the wild flight of the beaten insurgents. By this time, the relieving Imperials had cut the high road from Temeswar to Arad, and the insurgent retreat was forced to fall back in the direction of Rekasch and Lugosch.

At 9:00 in the evening on the 9th, the Oberkommandant of the victorious Austrian Army, Feldzugmeister Havnau, appeared at the point of a small cavalry detachment on the drawbridge leading to the Wiener Tor. His progress to the Festungskommandanten Rukavina, living in the casemates, was almost a triumphal procession, as the entire population of the place, soldiers and civilians, pressed to see their liberator.

During the course of the 107 day siege, an estimated 42,000 insurgents perished in trying to take the citadel. The approaches of the insurgent sappers had reached the crest of the glacis and the weakened garrison could hardly have had the strength to defend the ramparts against a determined storm. Relief had appeared just in time.

Veteran officers in the relieving forces reported, upon viewing the walls and city of Temeswar, that they had never seen a fortress so shot up, and the degree of damage was frightful. During the last 17 days and nights, the bombardment had been continuous. Many bombs penetrated not only through the roofs and floors, but even down into the cellars of houses. Especially striking was the destruction in the neighborhood of the magazine, where most of the houses were completely destroyed. The hospital, in spite of the fact that it flew the black flag, had over 100 bombs aimed at it, one of which alone had killed 7 men. The Austrians remarked that this fact gave little honor to the Magyars, in spite of their reputation for generosity.

With the liberation of the city, the suffering of the garrison and inhabitants was not at an end. Incidents of death by typhus, cholera and from the hospital fire continued at a barely reduced rate. It was claimed that the inhabitants who had been deprived for such a long time of all fresh vegetables, with the accompanied symptoms of scurvy, had, after the gates were opened, generally overindulged on melons, fruit, vegetables, etc., leading to a susceptibility to cholera. Among those dying of cholera was the Fortress commander, Feldmarschallleutenant Rukavina (+9 Sep 1849), and who is buried in the Cathedral of Temeswar.

During the 107 day siege, a military diary, from April 25th to August 9th, 1849, was kept by a Lt. Nikolaus Weymann of the XIII Banater Grenz Infantry Regiment, of incidents of the siege.

Selected extracts in translation follow (1):

23 May: Today over 200 shells fell in the Fortress. Two fires were set which were extinguished.

31 May: At midday 400 workers and other inhabitants of the fortress were released through the Wiener and Siebenbürger gates. They were forced back by the enemy to the crest of the glacis where they were readmitted to the fortress. They then attempted to break out under cover of darkness. Only a few succeeded and the remainder returned to the fortress where they were enrolled in the defense.

11 June: The enemy concentrated their bombardment on the powder magazines, the military hospital, the provisioning magazine and the Siebenbürger Kaserne. There is scarcely a building which is without trace of damage. The military hospital suffers the greatest, upon which bomb after bomb has fallen. Ten fires have broken out in the hospital and elsewhere in the city. Thirty fires burned which were extinguished.

13 June: The bombardment and counter battery fire continues unabated.

15 June: The men manning the artillery on the walls work at a temperature of 30° C. in the shade.

16 June: Scarcely a building is undamaged. The arches of the Domkirche are shot through.

18 June: More than 2,000 bombs have fallen in the fortress. The heat is oppressive. The sick in the hospital number 1,100 [built to accommodate 600].

19 June: The exhaustion of the garrison and inhabitants is immense. The streets have been cleared of rubble to allow free passage for the fire fighters.

23 June: Over 30° C. in the shade. Over 1,100 were sick.

25 June: The heat is oppressive. Among the inhabitants appears Nervenfieber (typhus), scurvy and cholera.

29 June: An enemy deputation arrives at the gates to offer terms [obviously refused].

5 July: Gefreite Blazek has gone over to the enemy in order to get reports into the completely cutoff fortress. He returns with the news that Arad has fallen and the Russians are underway with 200,000 troops to intervene in Hungary.

6 July: Fires burn everywhere. Although many fires are extinguished, the Kloster der Barmherzigen Brüder burned out of control and included the church with nearby buildings; the Bürgerliche Krankenhaus and part of the Fortification Bauhofs. In greatest danger was the military hospital. The conditions of the sick are dreadful. There is no word for their suffering.

7 July: The garrison is exhausted by the 30° C. heat. The fire in the Kloster Barmhertzigen is still not extinguished. Fire from enemy batteries, except for short intervals, is continuous. Drinking water is restricted. New wells are being dug.

11 July: A bomb ignited a supply magazine and the fire spread to the casemates.

12 July: The kasserne and batteries are the main targets of the enemy. Medical personal are busy day and night with amputations.

14 July: The houses are destroyed one after the other. Strong cellars no longer provide safety. The horses are being eaten.

15 July: A quarter of the garrison is near death. A second quarter of the garrison lies in the hospital. Part of the garrison remains unserviceable with the troops. Over 60 officers are badly sick.

17 July: The Zeughaus, one of the strongest buildings known, lies in ashes.

22 July: The death rate and sickness increase markedly. The main hospital offers no protection from enemy fire. Typhus and scurvy are predominating.

26 July: The heat is unbearable.

28 July: The hospital had 40 dead today. It contains 1,300 sick and over 1,000 sick are still with the troops. Many companies are without officers. Provisions originally for 3 months are long at an end.

29 July: The greatest part of the medical personal is down with typhus. Five doctors have died in the last few days.

3 Aug: The bulk of the enemy fire is directed at the main hospital.

5 Aug: Today there were four cholera cases with their quick unhappy course. The city is one large sick camp. An enemy deputation came to parley at the Wiener Gate and to offer terms.

9 Aug: The enemy runs ----- to the Csoka Wald [NW of Temeswar by the Csoka puszta] retreating in complete flight towards St. Andreas. Imperial cavalry appears and the gates are opened for the first time in 107 days.

So ended the epic defense of Temeswar. The crushing defeat of the Magyar revolutionaries at Temeswar sealed the fate of the revolution. Of the Temeswar garrison of 8,851, 112 (1.9%) were killed in action, 2,162 (24.5%) died due to disease, ca. 2,000 of these from typhus alone, 376 (4.2%) wounded and 27(0.3%) captured for a total loss of 2,565 (28.9%).

BANATERS IN THE 61st, 29th and 33rd INFANTRY REGIMENTS GRUNDBUCH RECORDS

NATURE, SELECTION AND TREATMENT OF THE DATA

These data which follow, for the 61st and 29th Infantry Regiments (IR), were abstracted from the Abgang (discharge) Grundbuch records in the Kriegsarchiv Wien, available on microfilm from the Family History Library (FHL) in Salt Lake. These two regiments recruited in the Banat. The 61st IR, first raised in 1798, recruited mainly in the Eastern Banat from ca. 1801 to 1883, while the 29th IR recruited in the Western Banat from 1853 to 1883. Before 1853 the 29th recruited heavily in Schliesen, Bohemia, Moravia and Galicia as well. Line regiments in the early 19th century were not exclusively designated by a number, but also in the first half of the 19th century by the name of the sponsoring regimental colonel proprietor or "Inhaber". Thus, the 61st is the St. Julien 61st or many times simply the St. Julien Regiment. Since the Inhaber was changed from time to time, his designation can sometimes lead to confusion. This system of a proprietor or honorary colonel was not abolished until 1868. Infantry regiments of the line consisted of two or three field battalions and a garrison, or Depot battalion. Each battalion contained six companies. At full strength, a line regiment numbered 4,400 men.

The Abgang records listed year and place born, religion, date of enlistment, occupation and frequently all or part of the service record. With this data it was possible to scan the records, rejecting all these who were Greek Orthodox (Altgläubers) and select those non-Greek Orthodox individuals who came from Banat localities. Since the Banat was not a Hungarian Komitat (county), the records distinguished the Banat separately from other provinces of the Empire. This distinction between the Banat and other Hungarian counties was an important aid in scanning and selecting the desired records.

These Abgang or Grundbuch Blätter was kept in triplate. One copy was kept with the regiment, one copy went to the Proprietor colonel and the final copy was sent to Vienna. Only the Vienna copies have survived and are deposited in the Kriegsarchiv. Many of these copies have uniform handwriting throughout and do not have any service record details. This suggests that this is a pro forma copy made out and filed on the occasion of the discharge of the subject.

The later Grundbuch records of the 29th contained a physical description of the individual, including languages spoken. With this language information it was possible to be even more selective in identifying Donauschwabs by permitting the rejection of those Hungarians or Romanians who were Catholic, but did not speak German. Some examples of Grundbuch records are given at the end of this section.

Selected items from the service records, when available, have been included in the comments section of the following databases. Promotions to non-commission officer status, deaths, marriages, awards and events which indicated participation in campaigns are included. Routine transfers, reenlistments and discharges given in the service records are, for the most part, not included in the abstracts.

The ethnic composition of the 61st IR in 1914 was 37% German and 38% Romanian, while the 29th IR was 44% Serbo-Croat.

The available Grundbuch records of the 61st IR cover men born as early as 1775 to 1847. The 29th IR originally recruited in the district around Troppau, the capital of Austrian Silesia. It did not start recruiting in the Banat until 1853. The available records for the 29th IR cover men born from 1831 to 1848.

The records of the 33rd IR containing Banaters are much more limited since the 33rd did not start recruiting in Arad County until about 1856. Muster lists for the 61st IR, for 1799-1820, were also available and have also been abstracted and included in this work.

In general, the handwriting in the Grundbuch records was fairly legible. This fact, along with the uniform record format, aided in scanning the records. The handwriting in the service section tended to be indifferent, and since the entries were added as the events occurred, tended to be in many different styles. The entries in the database have been sorted first, by place of birth and then by surname. The spelling of Banat place names, so far as possible, is given in the German version and follows that of Regenyl and Scherer.

In practice, the Imperial conscription system was very selective, so that the rank and file came only from the lower classes. Conscripts not completely fit for service in line regiments or of small stature tended to get drafted into the transport services. The enlisted men served under wretched conditions and were subject to severe corporal punishments. Flogging was discontinued only in 1867. These conditions contributed to a high desertion rate.

Conscription regulations were not uniform throughout all the lands of the double headed eagle. In the immediate post-Napoleonic period, enlistments from the Austrian provinces were subject to a 14 year enrollment, but those enrolled from Hungary were subject to lifetime conscription.

In some areas, enlistments in the early 19th century were for 10 years. In 1845, the enlistment period was reduced to 8 years with two years in the reserves, and in 1858 this was made uniform throughout the Empire. Recruits were generally age 20-21 when called up. Landowners, students, priests, miners, some government officials and some agricultural occupations were exempt from conscription. In 1867, at the time of the Ausgleich, a 3 year enlistment period with seven years in the reserves was adopted. At this time, the manpower pool was enlarged and men in some previously exempt categories were subject to conscription. Discharges before the enlistment period had expired were sometimes due to invalid condition. Other, more frequent, discharges before the end of the enrollment period were due to the fact that, especially after 1849, many more recruits were enrolled than the financial resources of the army could accommodate. As a result, some recruits were discharged shortly after being enrolled or given extended unpaid Urlaub (furlough) before the end of their service. The all too common notes of death while on Urlaub testifies to the large number of men in this category. Such troops were often only recalled for yearly maneuvers or in emergencies.

Decorations were accompanied by a stipend or pension which varied depending on the type of award.

Generally, one battalion of the regiment, a depot battalion, was kept in the recruiting district as an intake and training unit. Detachments were then forwarded to the remaining battalions in the field as conditions warranted.

In those cases where an individual in the database could be matched with the same person in the appropriate family book, the exact birth date has been inserted. These data have been taken from the following:

CAMPAIGNS OF THE 61ST INFANTRY REGIMENT

The 61st IR, raised in 1798, participated in all Austrian military campaigns from 1805 to the end of World War I.

In reviewing the campaigns in which the 61st and 29th took part, one is struck by how ill-served these, as well as most other Austrian-Hungarian line regiments, were by their leadership --- with the possible exception of Radetzky. The Austrian-Hungarian generals not only tried to direct a flawed system, they were responsible many times for the flaws. The officer corps showed a marked inclination to cling to outdated methods and to avoid innovations --- in short, they exhibited a strong resistance to any progress or changes. Many of the commanding generals and higher officers appear to be inept and incapable to the point of not even being competent to command a platoon. All too often, either in victory or defeat, the results were a battlefield which was unnecessarily covered with the squandered bodies of their men. This effect was aggravated by the shock tactics favored by the conservative Austrian-Hungarian military tacticians. As the 19th century ground on, such massed formations became death traps against the fire and maneuver tactics of their opponents. This effect became particularly telling in the 1866 campaign with Prussia, in which the defeated Austrians suffered casualties at the rate of 1 to 5.

The 61st took the field in Italy in 1800. The first action of the 61st was by the 2nd battalion on April 9, 1800 at La Bocchetta (North of Genoa). The 2nd battalion saw further action at Monte Creto on May 13, 1800.

In 1805, the 61st IR was blockaded in Venice by the French. The following year, 1806, two companies of the regiment took part in the expedition to the Boche di Cattaro. Posting to Cattaro was not popular. Reaching the garrison involved a long march along the Dalmatian littoral on extremely poor roads. Transport by sea was considered too expensive by the government.

In the campaign of 1809 in Northern Italy, the St. Julien 61st IR participated in the following actions:

16 Apr 1809	Sacile (Fontana Fredda)/Friaal, Italy (3 Battalions)
29 Apr 1809	Soave, East of Verona (3 Battalions)
7-8 May 1809	Ponte Della Priula
12 May 1809	Venzona (3 Battalions)
1-4 Jun 1809	Pressburg
14 Jun 1809	Raab
15-16 Jun 1809	Graz (two companies)

In this campaign of 1809, the 61st Regiment suffered heavy losses in defense of the bridgehead at Pressburg.

In the campaign of 1813, the first and second battalions of the 61st fought at the Battle of Dresden, where they suffered heavy losses in the debacle of the collapse of the Allied left flank. All of the baggage was lost and many of the men of the 61st were taken prisoner by French cavalry charges under Murat.

A list of men taken prisoner in the battle can be found in the August and September 1813

Standestabellen of the regiment. Initially, the numbers of deaths reported in the Standestabellen are remarkably light, perhaps reflecting the fact that the French were left in possession of the field. The losses in the August reports were refined in the following months. In the final accounting, the regiment lost 7 officers and 1,083 men and all the regimental baggage at Dresden.

A total of 836 POWs lost in the August 1813 returns from the Battle of Dresden. FHL 1347657 61st Infantry Regiment, August 1813 Standestabellen.

The survivors were transferred to Pressburg, where the regiment was rebuilt. In rebuilding the 61st, it received 672 recruits from its recruitment areas, as well as the transfer of 1,080 men from other regiments. After being reconstituted, the regiment was transferred to Italy. In 1821, the three battalions of the regiment marched the length of Italy to take part in the intervention in Naples against the Neapolitan revolutionaries. In the winter of 1835, the 61st IR was stationed in Vicenza, where it suffered many deaths from cholera.

In the revolutions of 1848-1849, the Grenadier battalion of the regiment was engaged in street fighting against the insurgents at the barricades during “the five days of Milan”. The Grenadier Battalion was involved in the general Austrian retreat from Milan to the Mincio. During the retreat, the Grenadier battalion followed the route:

22 March 1849 Melegnano

23 March 1849 Lodi
25 March 1849 Crema
26 March 1849 Orzinori
27 March 1849 Mauerbio
28 March 1849 Mont Echiari
30 March 1849 Desenzano
31 March 1849 Castelnova
7 May 1849 Verona

The 1st and 2nd battalions of the 61st, in the Division of von Wocher, were stationed in Mantua and participated 6 April 1848 in engagements at Marcara, and later at Sorio and Torre di Contine. The 1st Battalion saw action at Montebello, Varese and Castenedo. In 1848, the 3rd Depot Battalion was stationed in Temeswar, and comprised part of the garrison during the siege.

In the campaign of 1859, the 61st was not involved in heavy fighting. The 3rd Battalion participated in the blockade of Venice.

In 1866, the 61st was decimated at the battle of Königgrätz where the Austrians lost over 20,000 prisoners, as well as suffering a massive casualty rate. Losses for the 61st were:

9 Officers and 202 men killed; 207 men missing
9 Officers and 295 men wounded
12 Officers and 216 men wounded and taken prisoner
6 Officers and 381 men taken prisoner

In this engagement the total regimental losses were 36 officers and 1,301 men.

Wawro describes the roll of the 61st on the opening phases of the battle of Königgrätz over control of the Svib Forest. “Mollinary, recognizing that Fransecki had overextended his division, ordered Fleischhacker’s 61st Regiment into the wood to resume the assault on Fransecki’s flank. The 61st were Hungarians, and they flatly refused to attack. A glance at the fringes of the wood, strewn with Austrian casualties, seemed to confirm the pre-war actuarial predictions of the Austrian war ministry, which held that during a firefight, half the men in any given Austrian storm column would be struck by one sort of missile or another, and that most of the wounded would die of traumatic lesions and infection. “”The [Hungarians] hung back and refused to relieve the first wave,” Mollinary reported, “”Their officers could not budge them.”” It was a critical moment and Mollinary resorted to a cynical ruse to impel his Magyars into the Svib Forest. He ordered the Hungarian hussar squadrons, attached to his corps for reconnaissance, to come up and hack their way into the wood. Only when the 61st saw their own countrymen being mown down without infantry cover did they finally agree to attack. Inside the Svib Forest, Fleischhacker’s Hungarians struggled, no less manfully, to maintain their formations in the thick cover, but were speedily outflanked and thrown back by just two battalions of Fransecki’s 26th Regiment. Untrained in skirmishing and open-order combat, the exhausted survivors of Fleischhacker’s brigade yielded the wood and retired on Cistoves.”

Twenty six silver bravery medals were awarded to men of the 61st Inf. Reg in the 1866 campaign

(11 1st Class and 15 2nd Class).

During much of the period covered by these records, the 61st Regiment was stationed in Northern Italy where, as noted in the comments section, many Banaters found graves at various localities in the Po Valley.

At the beginning of World War I, the 1st battalion was stationed in the Bocche di Cattaro and took part in the Serbian campaign to the Drina.

The military authorities had a policy of garrisoning troops outside their recruiting districts in order to repress nationalistic influences. Units were frequently transferred to prevent the manpower from establishing too friendly relationships with the local population. This characteristically frequent change of garrison stations is demonstrated by the above time line for the 61st IR.

CAMPAIGNS OF THE 29TH AND 33RD INFANTRY REGIMENTS

In the revolutions of 1848-1849, the 29th IR (two battalions) was stationed in Krakau where it participated in suppressing the liberal causes, but saw no heavy fighting. In 1849, one battalion was part of the Northern column which advanced on the Banat. This column crossed the Marosch at Mako and advanced along the axis, St. Nikolaus, Racz St. Peter, and Perjamosch, fighting an engagement at Dreispitz (Segenthau) on the 10th of August, where it helped cut off rebel trains retreating on Arad after the battle of Temeswar the previous day.

In 1859, the 29th was involved in heavy fighting at the encounter Battle of Solferino (24 June 1859). Some Silver Bravery Medal awards to men of the 29th following Solferino are:

Brandner Franz	Ulmbach
Wenzel Johann	D Etschka
Schneider Georg	Marienfeld
Holzner Johann	St. Georgen
Schmidt Johann	Hatzfeld
Kirchner Peter	Georgshaun
Kilcher Nikolaus	Offsenitza
Schneider Nikolaus	Ostern
Eberhardt Michael	Sigmundfeld
Koszmann Johann	Klek
Resnitz Georg	Ulmbach

Again in 1866, the 29th campaigned in Northern Italy and saw action at the Battle of Custozza (24 June 1866). At the beginning of World War I, the 29th was stationed on the Serbian border, but was soon engaged in Galicia and involved in the retreat to the Carpathians.

The 33rd IR took part in the battles of Solferino (1859) and Königgrätz (1866).
